Louisville Railway
Photograph Collection, 1880-1950

Scope and Content Note

The collection contains photographs of early mule cars, electric streetcars, buses, and interurban rail cars. Also included are photographs of car barns, power houses, shops, work cars, maintenance equipment, and street scenes of tracks and cars. There are some photographs of employees and company functions, but most are not identified.

Historical Note

The Louisville Railway Company (later the Louisville Transit Company) was a privately owned company which operated the trolley and interurban lines in Louisville and adjacent suburban areas. Mule-drawn streetcars were on the streets of Louisville by 1866. In 1890, three local streetcar companies were merged to form the Louisville Railway Company and the conversion to electric trolleys began that same year. Electric railway lines were extended to suburban areas in 1901-1910, and the first buses were put into service in Louisville in 1923. Private operation of the transit system ended in the 1970s and the Transit Authority of River City (TARC) was established by city government to run the system.
