Taylor-Hay Family Papers, 1783 – 1991

Biographical Note

The Taylor family came to Kentucky from Virginia. Richard Taylor, Jr. was a land surveyor in the Jackson Purchase region of western Kentucky in the 1820s and 1830s. His eldest son, Edmund Haynes Taylor was a banker in Lexington, Ky. with political ties to Henry Clay. The family speculated on land and dealt in slaves. Richard's youngest son John made many trips to New Orleans from Kentucky and died of a fever on a return trip from New Orleans. His eldest son was also Edmund Haynes Taylor.

John's son Edmund was sent to Lexington to be raised by his uncle Edmund. It was at this point in his life he added "Jr." to his name to distinguish him from his uncle. Edmund Haynes Taylor, Jr. was educated at the Sayre School near Lexington and went into banking in 1853 as part of the banking firm, Taylor, Turner and Co. This firm later became Taylor, Shelby and Co. before being forced out of business in 1857. The clients of this private bank included many people who dealt in the slave trade and other wealthy Kentuckians.

After the bank failed, E. H. Taylor, Jr. traded in cotton and tobacco before getting involved in the distilling business. In 1866 Taylor joined the firm of Gaines, Berry and Co. selling Old Crow bourbon. In 1870 Taylor purchased a distillery on the Kentucky River from the Swigert Family and rebuilt it as the OFC Distillery. He worked hard to make it a place that made fine whiskey that was also an attractive place to visit. E. H. Taylor, Jr. developed a philosophy of fine quality in his product including the packaging and production of whiskey. During this time he also became guardian for James E. Pepper, who inherited the Old Oscar Pepper Distillery from his father. Taylor eventually gained control of the distillery while Pepper traveled to New York and borrowed money from Taylor to pay debts.

The year 1877 was not kind to E. H. Taylor, Jr. over production of whiskey with the failure of the economy forced him into bankruptcy. The Old Oscar Pepper Distillery was at auction but the OFC Distillery was saved by the St. Louis firm of Gregory and Stagg. E. H. Taylor, Jr. soon came into conflict with Gregory and Stagg and resigned his position in 1880. He joined with his son Jacob Swigert Taylor to create the firm E. H. Taylor and Sons and opened the Old Taylor Distillery. This distillery was the family business up until prohibition.

E. H. Taylor, Jr. was very active in politics on the local and national level. He served several terms as Mayor of the city of Frankfort. He also served as representative to the state government and was active in keeping the location of the capital in Frankfort when the state decided to build a new capital building in 1904. On the national level he was active in getting the Bottled-in-Bond Act passed in 1897 and was active in the passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906. Taylor was a champion of the straight whiskey side of the debate over "What is Whiskey" that was prominent after the passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act.

Jacob Swigert Taylor married Sadie Crittenden and they had several children including a daughter, Mary Belle Taylor. Mary Belle Taylor marries Charles Walter Hay. C. W. Hay worked for the railroad when they married, but became involved in the horse racing industry. He became a judge at several race tracks across the nation and in Mexico and Cuba. He was also a breeder of thoroughbred horse and owned Scotland Farm near Frankfort, Ky. He and Mary Belle had four children, Edmund Haynes Taylor Hay, Eugenia Hay, Charles Walter Hay, Jr. and Jacob Swigert Hay.

Taylor Hay married Ruthie Williams in 1929. His father's friend Baron Long then gave him a start in the hotel business working at the U S Grant Hotel in San Diego, California. Taylor Hay moves up the career ladder at the U S Grant Hotel and then gets a position as Manager of the Towne House Hotel in Los Angeles. His position at the Towne House ends when the hotel was sold and Taylor was transferred to Chicago. Taylor Hay quickly finds a new position as manager of the Union League Club in Chicago and remains there until he retires in the 1970's.

Taylor Hay and his wife Ruthie purchase Scotland Farm when Mary Belle Taylor Hay dies. Ruthie comes to live in Kentucky, run the farm and raise their children, while Taylor stays in Chicago as manager of the Union League Club. They create for themselves a business of raising horses and cattle on Scotland Farm. When Taylor retires from the Union League, he returns to Kentucky and takes over the farm. He is diagnosed with throat cancer in the early 1980's and is treated for it in a hospital in Texas. Taylor Hay dies in 1993.

Scope and Content Note

Papers of Taylor and allied families begin in the late 18th century, when the Taylor family lived in Virginia; soon, Richard Taylor, Jr. moved to Kentucky and served as surveyor in the Jackson Purchase region. His letters describe land surveys, economics and the politics of the area. E. H. Taylor, Jr. moved to Lexington and entered the banking business with the firm of Taylor, Turner and Co. Papers from other branches of E. H. Taylor's family start in the 1830s; his wife's family, the Lewis family of Philadelphia, received letters from Europe as a friend spent several years touring there in the 1840s; those papers also include a letter dealing with a land grant in Texas after William Irvine Lewis was killed at the Alamo. The panic of 1857 forced Taylor out of banking and into the cotton business, as described by letters from J. J. Crittenden arranging for Taylor to purchase cotton in Memphis during the Civil War. The Lewis family was still in the Philadelphia area; Col. Callender Lewis served in the Quartermaster Corps as part of the Potomac front.

After the war, E. H. Taylor, Jr. entered the distilling business, first with Gaines, Berry and Co. selling Old Crow bourbon, and then on his own, opening the OFC distillery in Frankfort, KY in 1870. He became guardian to James E. Pepper and eventually took control of the Old Oscar Pepper distillery. He also purchased, and had his son run, the Jacob Swigert Taylor distillery in Woodford County, KY. By 1877, Taylor was in financial trouble and was forced to put the Old Oscar Pepper distillery up for auction and sell the controlling interest in the OFC distillery to the firm of Gregory and Stagg of St. Louis. Taylor indicated that he considered leaving the country for South America, but his economic interests recovered and he eventually started the firm of E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons and the Old Taylor distillery at the site of the Jacob Swigert Taylor distillery. The papers include many ledgers and correspondence from this period.

The turn of the century saw E. H. Taylor, Jr. involved with the passage of the Bottled-in-Bond Act (1897) and the Pure Food and Drug Act (1906) ending with the Taft Decision (1909) that defined "What is Whiskey?". He also served in state politics, as Mayor of Frankfort and state representative for Frankfort. During this time he worked to keep the capital from leaving the city of Frankfort. The collection moves into the 20th century with the papers of the Hay family and the Williams family. Mary Belle Taylor, the granddaughter of E. H. Taylor, Jr., married Charles Walter Hay and their son, E. H. Taylor Hay married Ruthie Williams. Both families lived on Scotland Farm, near Frankfort, KY. C. W. Hay started out in the railroad industry but quickly became a breeder of thoroughbred horses and a judge at race tracks. He had ties with tracks across the nation and in Cuba and Mexico. Those connections included Baron Long, owner of the U. S. Grant Hotel in San Diego, CA. Long hired and trained E. H. Taylor Hay in the hotel business, giving him a job at the Grant Hotel in 1930. Taylor Hay moved on to the Towne House Hotel in Los Angeles before finally becoming the manager at the Union League Club in Chicago in 1937. He remained as the manager there until retiring in 1973. His wife Ruthie and his children lived in Kentucky at Scotland Farm. Taylor Hay also bred horses and attempted to get into the distilling business; one of his good friends was Creel Brown, the owner of J. T. S. Brown distillery. He was also involved in talks with the K. Taylor distillery and looked into purchasing other small distilleries as they became available.

The Williams family, related to the Taylors by marriage, also has papers in the collection. Ruthie William Hay's father, Ben Williams, was a Circuit Court Judge in Kentucky and involved in politics during the 1920s. Her brother, John, worked for American Tobacco in North Carolina. The Hays' correspondence illuminates their professions; Ruthie's mother, sisters and their children are also correspondents. The collection includes letters from relatives serving in the Second World War. There are also letters from Taylor Hay, Jr. and his sister Mary Belle Hay as they are away for school in the 1950s. Ruthie was taking care of the farm and corresponding with Taylor Hay during this period; their letters discuss the breeding of horses and cattle as well many other animals. The papers end as Taylor Hay retired and returned to Kentucky to live. He developed cancer and went to Texas for treatment in the 1980s.

Death played a large role in the contents of this collection: Judge Williams and C. W. Hay both died unexpectedly in the 1930s; Mary Belle Taylor Hay died in the early 1940s; C.W. Hay, Jr. and his wife died in a house fire in the 1950s; and Jackie Hay died in an automobile accident in the 1960s. The 1970s and 80s correspondence deals with the deaths of Ruthie Williams Hay's sisters and brothers. The deaths of other family members, some involving suicides, are also discussed.
